Conference Objectives This regional conference will inform participants about developing and operating organic diversion programs in the western United States and Canada where many communities are geographically isolated. These communities are seeking ways to reduce solid waste disposal costs by recycling organic waste. A principal goal of the conference is to develop improved regional collaboration among stakeholders, public and private, on organic waste recovery, and to harness the power of breakthrough thinking and initiatives to create needed solutions. The program will have a particular focus on:

- Facing the challenges of operating composting systems in cold/arid climates
- Working with limited access to landfills and distant markets for recycled products
- Developing markets for woody biomass
- Designing food waste diversion programs to be integrated into existing infrastructures
- Creating programs that meet regulatory standards for odor, wildlife management, food waste storage/ collection and compost quality

Conference Overview This Conference is a great learning opportunity for participants, with over 30 informative presentations, exhibits, field trips and a workshop. You are invited to exhibit your company/organization's products, services and equipment on July 20 and 21, 2009 in Jackson at the Snow King Resort.
